One quart of finely shredded red cabbage, soaked in cois water ten minutes. Use a grantle siew pan, one that is broad rather than high and that has a tightly fifting cover. Put in two rounding tablespoons butter, one level teaspoon said, and saltspoon pepper and one habiespoon chopped onton and cook on a moderate heat until the onton gives out a strong oder. Lift the cabbage from the water shake off all that will drop and put it into the hot butter. Cover tightly and add no more water, that which comes from the cabbage as it heats will be sufficient if it is cooked slowly. Turn the cabbage over so the butter will penetrate every part of it. Let it cook moderately, being very careful that the water does not bell entirely away. It it begins to sizzle, add meetaly two or three tablespoons of water. When you can cut the cabbage with a knife against the kettle add one maspoon sucar and two tablespoons vinegar and cook ten minutes longer. Then turn out into a round dieh and pile but mashed potate tightly around the edge. HEIDELBERG CABBAGE.
